A guide to workforce planning and development

Overview

This booklet has been developed to help you prepare a simple workforce plan using the My Business Workforce Plan template. Work through the 5 stages of workforce planning and development with the templates provided to fill in your own workforce plan. Identify actions to bridge from where your workforce is now to where you want to be in the future. Included in this booklet are the following templates:

- MY Business Workforce Plan
- Current Workforce Profile
- Future Workforce Profile
- Current Workforce Skills
- Future Workforce Skills

An Introduction to Workforce Planning and Development

For many businesses including Small and Medium Sized Enterprises (SMEs), undertaking workforce planning and development must have business benefits and outcomes. Most businesses find they need to undertake workforce planning and development for one or more of the following reasons:

- Growth in: sales demand (local, interstate or international), new markets, new products/services.
- Decline in: sales demand from existing clients, number of new clients, supply chain.
- Changes in: market preferences, competitors, the economy (local, interstate and international), SME strategic plan, technology and equipment, productivity, job requirements, finance costs.

The key is not to over complicate the process and to see workforce planning and development as a way to get a better understanding of:

- your current capability and capacity
- what is required into the future
- what the gaps are.

Workforce planning and development will help you to achieve your business goals over the longer term. Workforce Development is the planned development of staff in a business to improve the ability to meet changes in:

- business or job requirements
- client and customer demands
- market conditions.

Simply put workforce development is about:

- getting the right people
- growing the right people
- keeping the right people.

Workforce planning is the process of forecasting your staffing needs and working out the range of ways you can create and maintain the workforce in line with your business goals. There are 5 stages in building a workforce plan as outlined in the model below:

Building your Workforce Plan

Ask yourself and your staff the following questions to get them involved in building your workforce plan. Fill out the My Business Workforce Plan template as you go.

Stage 1 – Context and Environment

First things first – you need to be clear in your own mind why you need to undertake workforce planning. The reasons need to be directly related to your business's strategic plan and understood by everyone involved. Where is the business heading, for example are you growing, downsizing, transitioning, shifting skills, introducing new technology or wanting to maintain your position. Find out what is going on in your region, industry sector and markets and how this may affect your workforce. Consider what is going on internally and how this could impact on your workforce.

Consider the workforce implications of your strategic plans (This includes reviewing your vision, mission, goals, the current position of your business and assessing capability and capacity of your workforce to support your strategic plans into the future.)

Introduction: Why do we need to undertake workforce planning? Why is it important? What are our goals for this Workforce Plan? What are the performance measures for our Workforce Plan?

Links to strategy: What are our strategic objectives (link to strategic plan)? How does this affect our workforce? What will we focus on?

External environment: What is happening in the external environment (at an industry or regional level)?

What policies and initiatives (national, state, local) are being implemented? What challenges are being faced? (For example skills/labour shortages, attraction and retention, funding.)

Internal environment: What is happening in the internal environment? What is your business planning process? What are the links between business planning and workforce issues? What current initiatives, projects and services are being provided? What funding sources are accessed? What is the structure of the business? What is the current capability and capacity to deliver products and services?

Stage 2 – Current Workforce Profile

So what do you know about your current workforce profile? The demographics and generational mix, workforce issues and skills profile – perhaps your current workforce has hidden potential that your business could capitalise on. Gain a clear picture of your workforce's strengths and development needs by undertaking a skills stock take, analysing patterns in workforce data and asking your employees for feedback on any problems, concerns or areas for improvement through consultation or undertaking an employee survey. Mirror your business's structure when looking at aggregated information about your workforce.

Current Workforce Profile: What is your current workforce profile? What are the current skills and competencies of your workforce? What are the strengths and development needs? What is the consultation with your current workforce telling you regarding workforce issues? What is working well or what could be improved? What are the current workforce priorities, based on your workforce profiling and analysis?

Stage 3 – Future Workforce Profile

Based upon the strategic direction of the business, where are you likely to be in 3-5 years time? Think about your future products and services; markets; partnerships; stage of the business cycle and needs of your workforce.

Forecast what may happen to your workforce over 3-5 years considering demographics, the aging workforce, generational expectations, development needs and changes in job roles. What is likely to shift and change? What are the possible (3-5) scenarios that might emerge in the future? What does the ideal or desired workforce look like?

Future Workforce Profile: What future products and services will be provided by the organisation (link to strategic plan)? What will the future environment require? What are the workforce implications and issues? What is the workforce supply and demand? What future skills and competencies are required? What is the consultation with your workforce telling you regarding future workforce issues? What are the future workforce priorities, based on your workforce profiling and analysis?

Stage 4 – Gap Analysis and Closing Strategies

Take what you know about your current workforce and what you want your desired workforce to be like and compare the difference. What are the areas that need to be managed and developed? Identify and prioritise strategies related to attraction and recruitment; workforce management and development; retention and transition; and general Human Resource issues. Fill in your workforce plan allocating responsibilities and timeframes to bridge the gaps.

Gap Analysis and Closing Strategies: What are the key areas of need/action to move from where the organisation is now to where it wants to be? NOW...Prioritise the 'issues' and develop an action plan to address the gap.

Consider the following areas:

- Attraction “strategies” – ways to attract the right people, from the widest possible sources (This strategy will include HR activities such as defining organisation and job structures, recruitment, and selection.)
- Development “strategies” – ways to get people working most productively for you (This includes having effective induction processes, training processes, developing your talented people, planning for succession, regularly reviewing how you deploy people, and managing and improving performance.)
- Retention “strategies” – ways to ensure that you meet a diverse range of employees’ needs and have a productive culture in which people want to work. Ways to keep talented, valued employees, even during a downturn.

Stage 5 – Review and Evaluation

What are the key outcomes of your workforce action plan? How will you evaluate the strategies in your workforce plan? What are the next steps for implementation of your workforce action plan?
